MANGROVE SWAMP

Mangrove is a halophyte vegetal formation which extends on about 330 000 ha in Madagascar and the 98% of this area occupy the western coastal area of the Island.

Despite the sensibility to the climate variations, the mangrove trees play a very important ecological role.

As being important carbon storage, the mangrove trees play a role in the control of the gas in Greenhouse effect, particularly the carbon dioxide.

The mangrove trees play also a strategic role on the coastal area fronting the cyclones, it constitutes a dam to stop the wind, waves and streams it is an area of reproduction and nursery for several bird species
